

Nepal's Tiger Population Triples in 13 Years

By Rose Peters

August 9, 2022 / The Good News Hub

Nepal's leader recently said something exciting: Nepal has more tigers (1) now! Before, there were only a few tigers, but now there are a lot more. In 2010, there were only 121 tigers left in Nepal's forests (2). But because of people working to protect (3) them, there are now almost three times as many!

Nepal did a few things to help the tigers. They made special parks for them and made it harder for people to hurt (4) them. They also worked with India to help (5) the tigers move around safely. The WWF in Nepal is happy (7) about this. They say many people and groups worked hard to help the tigers.

People went out to count the tigers for many days. They looked over a lot of land to find them. This is part of a big goal. People want to double the number of tigers by 2022.

Overall, tigers around the world are doing a bit better (8). A group called the IUCN says there are more tigers now than before (9). They're still not safe (10), but people are trying to help them.